

What are the actions that students in your class spend 75% or more of their time doing on a regular basis?	What actions are most authentic to your discipline? That is those things that real scientists, writers, artists, and so on actually do as they go about their work?	What are the actions you remember doing yourself from a time when you were actively engaged in developing some new understanding of something within the discipline or subject area?

Reflection: